Executor.

Medina County, Greeting:

Our prohibition friends are fond of saying that the world would be far better off if the "curse of drink" were wiped out of existence. We agree with them. But the "curse of drink" means intemperance drunkenness.

Beer is not conductive to drunkenness, although the association of ideas is so close in the minds of some people that they make no dis-crimination whatever and, either ignorantly or thoughtlessly, they hold beer fully as responsible for drunkenness as anything else. The fallacy and injustice of this assumption are at once apparent to any fair minded person who considers these facts: Beer is essentially a drink of temperate people and is the best friend of true temperance. It contains so small a percentage of alcohol as to render it absolutely harmless if taken in moderation. Many eminent divines who have made a close investigation of sa-loon conditions and the liquor question in general, declare that the moderate use of beer and light wines should be encouraged rather than discouraged, because they recognize the great truth that moderate indulgence is the only way by which true temperance can be promoted and lastingly maintained.

Rev. Dr. Parkhurst of New York, says:

"I am decidedly of the opinion that the more wine and beer there is produced in this country and the more freely it is transported from state to state, the less whiskey will be used and the smaller the amount of drunkenness."

Can, then, any right thinking person suppose that a light beer -a truly, healthful, mild and harmless beverage-is an enemy to mankind-that it can in any way be construed as the "curse of drink" Yet the prohibitionists assert that it is and they would, therefore, abolish it. But in so doing they would but magnify the evil, drunkenness, they are trying to suppress. -Paid Advertisement.

How To Give Quinine To Children.

PEBRILINE is the trade-mark name given to an improved Quinine. It is a Tasteless Syrup, pleasant to take and does not disturb the stomach. Children take it and never know it is Quinine. Also especially adapted to adults who cannot take ordinary Quinine. Does not nauseate nor cause nervousness nor ringing in the head. Try it the next time you need Quinine for any purpose. The Evening of an Old Score. Rat-tat-tat-tat!-Major Bristow's ivory-headed camphor-wood stick thumped on the great door of Damory court. The sound had a tang of impatience, for he had used the knocker more than once without result. Now he strode to the end of the porch and raised his voice in a stentorian bellow that brought Uncle Jefferson shuffling around the path from the kitchens with all the whites of his eyes showing.

"You dog-gone lazy rascal!" thundered the major. "What do you mean, fact, there is only one thing that sah, by keeping a gentleman cooling will do it, and put you in line for his heels on the door-step like a taxcollector? Where's your master?"

"Pshaw!" said the major. "Touch of spring fever, I rackon. Aunt Daph feeds him too well. Give bim less fried chicken and more ash-cake and buttermilk. Make him some juleps."

The old negro shook his head. "Moghty neah use up all dat mintbaid Ah foun'." he said, "but ain' do no good. Majah, Ah's sho' 'feabed sumpin' gwineter happen."

"Nonsense!" the major sniffed. "What fool idea's got under your wool now? Been seeing Mad Anthony again, I'll bet a dollar."

Uncle Jefferson swallowed once or twice with seeming difficulty and turned the gravel with his toe. "Dat's so," he said gloomily. "Ah done see de old man de yuddah day 'bout et. Ant'y, he know! He see trouble ercomin' en trouble er-gwine. Dat same right de hoss-shoe drop offen de stable do', en dis ve'y mawnin' er buhd done fly inter de house. "Shucks!" said the major. "You're as loony as old Anthony, with your infernal signs. If your Mars' John's = been out all day I reckon he'll turn up before long. I'll wait for him a while." He started in, but paused on the threshold. "Did you say-abthat mint was all gone, Unc' Jeffer-

Uncle Jefferson's lips relaxed in a wide grin. "Ah reck'n dah's er few stray sprigs lef', suh. Step in en mek yo'se'f et home. Ef Mars' John see yo', he be mought'ly hoped up. Ah gwineter mix yo' dat julep in two shakes!'

He disappeared around the corner of the porch and the major strode into the hall, threw his gray slouch hat on the table, and sat down.

It was quiet and peaceful, that aneient hall. He fell to thinking of the many times, of old, when he had sat there. The house was the same again, now. It had waked from a thirtyyears' slumber to a renewed prime. Only he had lived on meanwhile and now was old. He sighed.

How gay the place had been the night of the ball, with the lights and roses and music! He remembered hat the doctor had said about Valiant and Shirley-it had lain ever since in his mind, a painful speculation. The recollection roused another thought from which he shrank. He stirred uneasily. What on earth kept that old darky so long over that julep?

A slight noise made him turn his head. But nothing moved. Only a creak of the woodwork, he thought, and settled back again in his chair.

It was, in fact, a stealthy footfall he had heard. It came from the library, where a shabby figure crouched, listening, in the corner behind the tapestried screen-a man evilly clad, with a scarred cheek.

It had been with no good purpose that Greef King had dogged the major these last few days. He hugged a hot hatred grown to white heat in six years of prison labor within bleak walls at the clicking shoe-machine, or with the chain-gang on blazing osty turnpikes. He had slunk behind him that afternoon, creeping up the drive under cover of the bushes. and while the other talked with Uncle Jefferson, had skirted the house and entered from the farther side, through an open French window. Now as he peered from behind the screen, a poker, snatched from the fireplace, was in his hand. His furtive gaze fell upon a morocco-covered case on a commode by his side. He lifted its lid and his eyes narrowed as he saw that it held a pistol. He set down the poker noiselessly and took the

Uncle Jefferson bore a tray with a frosted goblet over whose rim peeped green leaves and which spread abroad an ambrosial odor, which the major sniffed approvingly as the other set the burden on the desk at his elbow. "Majah," said the latter solemnly,

'you reck'n Mars' John en Miss Shir-"Good lord!" said the major, wheeling to the small ormolu clock on the

The hidden watcher waited motionless. From where he stood he could look. He waited till through the rear window he saw the negro's bent figure disappear into the kitchens. Then he noiselessly lifted himself upright, and resting the pistol on the screen-top. took deliberate aim and pulled the trigger.

The hammer clicked sharply on the worthless thirty-year-old cartridge, and the major sprang around with an exclamation, as with an oath, the other dashed the screen aside and again pulled the trigger.

"You infernal murderer!" cried th major. It was all he said, for, as he swung his chair up, the one-time bully of Hell's-Half-Acre rushed in and ative. "Ten minutes gone," he said struck him a single sledge-hammer then. "Chalmers ough, to be at Roseblow with the clubbed pistol. It fell full on the major's temple and the to go-like this. But it wasn't-apoheavy iron crashed through.

Greef King stood an instant breathing hard, then, without withdrawing Valiant went out quietly. Huddled in his eyes from the prostrate form, his hand groped for the cold goblet and lifting it to his lips, drained it to its dregs. "There!" he said. "There's my six-years' debt paid in full, ye lily-livered, fancy-weskited hellion! Take that from the mayor of the Dome!"

There was a man's step on the gravel and the sudden bark of a dog. The pistel fell from his hand. He stole on tiptoe along the corridor and leaped through the French window. he meet this woman who recoiled from As he dashed across the lawn, a the very sight of his face? In the startled cry came from the house behind him.

No human eye had seen him, but he had been observed for all that. Run your best now, Greef King! Double and turn how you will, there is a swifter Nemesis pursuing. It is only a dog, and not a big one at that, but it is of a faithful breed that knows neither fear nor quarter. Like white lightning, without a bark or growl, Chum launched himself on the fleeing quarry, and in the shadow of the trees his teeth met in the ragged trousers-leg.

Kicking, beating with his hands at the dragging weight, the man dashed on. Not till they had reached the hemlocks was that fierce grip broken, and then it was with a tearing of flesh and sinew. Panting, snarling with rage and pain, the man seized a fallen branch and stood at bay, striking out with the garden." vicious sweeping blows. But the bulldog, the hair bristling up on his thick neck, his red-rimmed eyes flery, circled beyond reach of the flail, crouching for another spring:

Again he launched himself, and the man, dodging, blundered full-face into thorn-bush. The sharp spines slashed his forehead and the starting blood blinded him, so that he ran without sense of direction-straight upon the declivity of Lovers' Leap. He was toppling on its edge before he could stop, and then threw himself backward, clutching desperately at the slippery fern-covered rock, feeling his feet dangling over nothing. He dug his fingers into the yielding soil and with knee and elbow strove frenziedly to crawl to the path.

But the white bulldog was upon him. The clamping teeth met in the striving fingers, and with a scream of pain Greef King's hold let go and dog and man went down together.

Ten minutes later a motor was builing itself along the Red Road to the village. The doctor was in his office and no time was lost in the return. En route they passed Judge Chalmers driving, and seeing the flying haste, he turned his sweating pair and lashed them after the car.

So that when the major finally opened his eyes from the big leather couch, he looked on the faces of two of his oldest friends. Recollection and understanding seemed to come at once. "Well-Southall?"

The doctor's hand closed over the white one on the settee. He did not answer, but his chin was quivering and he was winking fast.

"How long?" asked the major after a lengthy minute. "Maybe-maybe an hour, Bristow Maybe not." The major winced and shut his eyes, but when the doctor, reaching swiftly for a phial on the table, turned again, it was to find that look once more on him, now in yearning appeal. "Southall," he said, "send for Judith. !-- I must see her. There's time." The judge started up. "I'll bring her," he said, and his voice had all the tenderness of a woman's. "My carriage is at the door and with those horses she ought to be here in twenty minutes." He leaned over the couch. "Bristow," he said, "would you-would you like me to send for the rector?"

The major smiled, a little wistfully, and shook his head. He lay silent for a while after the judge had gone outhe seemed housing his strength-while the ormolu clock on the desk ticked ominously on, and the doctor busied himself with the glasses beside him. Presently he said huskily:

"You've had a bad fall, Bristow. You were dizzy, I reckon."

"Dizzy!" echoed the major with feeble asperity. "It was Greef King." "Greef King! Good God!"

"He was hiding behind the screen He struck me with something. He swore at his trial he'd get me. I was -a fool not to have remembered his time was out." A look, wolf-like and grim, had sprung into the doctor's face. His eyes searched the room, and he crossed the floor and picked up something from the rug. He looked at it a moment, then thrust it hastily into his breast

"I-remember now. It was a pistol. He snapped it twice, but it missed fire."

"He can't hide where we'll not find him!" The doctor spoke with low but terrible energy.

"Not that I care-myself," said the major difficultly. "But I reckon be'd better be settled with, or he'll-be killing some one worth while one of these days." A big tear suddenly loosed itself down his cheek, and he turned hastily away. "There's no call to feel bad," said the major gruffly. "I've sort of been a

"I reckon," the major murmured with a faint smile, "you won't get quite so much fun out of Chalmersand the rest. They never did rise to you as I did."

A little later he asked for the restorwood by now . . . what a fool way plexy, Southall, anyway."

At the sound of wheels on the drive, a corner of the hall were Uncle Jefferson and Aunt Daphne, with Jereboam, the major's body-servant, Aunt Daphne, her apron thrown over her face was rocking to and fro silently. and old Jereboam's head was bowed on his breast. Valiant went quickly to the rear of the hall. A painful embarrasament nad come to him-a curious confusion mingling with a fastidious sense of shrinking. How should swiftness of the tragic event he had forgotten this. From the background he saw Judge Chalmers lift down the frail form, and suddenly his heart leaped. There were two feminine figures: Shirley was with her mother.

The doctor stood just inside the library door and Mrs. Dandridge went hastily toward him, her light cane tapping through the stricken eilence. Jereboam lifted his head and looked at her

"Reck'n Mars' Monty cyan' see ole Jerry now," he quavered, "but yo'-all gib him mah love, Mis' Judith, and tell him-" His voice broke. Yes, yes, Jerry, I will."

The doctor closed the door upon her and came to where Shirley waited. "Come, my dear," he said, and dropped his arm about her. "Let us go out to As they passed Valiant, she held out her hand to him. There was no word between them, but as his hand swallowed hers, his heart said to her, "I love you, I love you! No matter what is between us, I shall always love you!" It was wordless, a heart-whisper that only love itself could hear, and he could read no answer in the deep pools of her eyes, heavy now with unshed tears. But in some subtle way his voiceless greeting comforted and lightened by a little the weight of dumb impotence that he had borne. In the library, lighted so brightly by the sunlight, yet grave with the hush of that solemn presence, the major looked into the face of the woman for whose coming he had waited so anx-

"It's all-up, Judith," he said faintly. "I've come to the jumping-off place." She looked at him whitely. "Monty, Monty!" she cried. "Don't leave me this way! I always thought-"

He guessed what she would have said. "Heaven knows you're needed more than me, Judith. After all, I reckon when my time had to come I'd have chosen the quick way." His hair, sitting there, was not alone, voice trailed out and he struggled for breath.

"Jerry's in the hall, Monty. He asked me to give you his love."

"Poor old nigger! He-used to tote me on his back when I was a little shaver." There was a silence. "Don't kneel, Judith," he said at length, "You will be so tired."

She rose obediently and drew up a chair. "Monty," she faltered tremulously, "shall I say a prayer? I've never prayed much-my prayers never seemed to get above the ceiling, somehow. But I'll-try."

He smiled wanly. "I wouldn't want any better than yours, Judith. But seems as if I'd been prayed over enough. I reckon God Almighty's like anybody else, and doesn't want to be ding-donged all the time."

He seemed to have been gathering his resolution, and presently his hand fumbled over his breast. "My wallet; give it to me." She drew it from the pocket and the uncertain fingers took out a key. "It opens a tin box in my trunk. There's-a letter in it for you. He paused a moment, panting: "Judith," he said, "I've got to tell you, but it's mighty hard. He lifted his hand with difficulty and put the key into hers. "The seal's still unbroken, Judith," he said, "but I've kept it these thirty years."

She was holding the key in her hands, looking down upon it. There was a strained half-fearful wonder in her face. For an instant she seemed quite to have forgotten him in the

If you cared more for him than for Sassoon, you might have forgiven him, and I should have lost you! I didn't want you to call him back, Judith! I wanted my chance! And so-I took it. A shiver went over her set facelike a breath of wind over tall grass. and she seemed to come back from an infinite distance to place and moment. Between the curtains a white butterfly hovered an instant, and in the yard she heard the sound of some winged thing fluttering. The thought darted to her that it was the sound of her own dead heart awaking. She looked at the key and all at once put a band to her mouth as though to still words clamoring there.

"Judith," he said tremulously, between short struggles for breath, "all these years, after I found there was no chance for me, I reckon I'veprayed only one prayer. 'God, let it be Sassoon that she loved!' And I've prayed that mighty near every day The thought that maybe it was Valiant has haunted me like a ghost. You never told-and I never dared ask you.

Judith-" Her face was still averted, and when she did not speak he turned his head from her on the pillow, with a breath that was almost a moan. She started. looking at him an instant in piteous hasitation, then swiftly kissed the little key and closed her hand tight upon it. Truth? She saw only the pillow and the graying face upon it! She threw herself on her knees by the couch and laid her lips on the pallid forehead.

"It-it was Sassoon, Monty," she said, and her voice broke on the first lie she had ever told.

"Thank God!" he gasped. He struggled to raise himself on his elbow, then suddenly the strength faded out and he settled back.

Her cry brought the doctor, but this time the restorative seemed of no avail, and after a time he came and touched her shoulder. With a last long look at the ash-pale face on the settee she followed him from the room. In the yellow parlor he put her into a chair.

"No," he said, in answer to her look, "he won't rouse again." "I will wait," she told him, and he left her, shutting the door with careful softness.

But the slight figure with its sliver Ghosts were walking up and down. Not the misty wraiths John Vallant had at times imagined went fitting along the empty corridors, but faces very clear in the sunlight, that came and went with the memories so long woven over by the sbuttle of timeevoked now by the touch of a key that her hand still clenched tightly in its palm.

There welled over her in a tide those days of puzzle, the weeks of waiting silence, the slow inexorable months of heartache, the long years that had deepened the mystery of Beauty Valiant's exile. In the first shock of the news that Sassoon had fallen by his hand, she had thought she could not forgive him that broken faith. She and his promise to her had not weighed in the balance against the idea of manly "honor!" But this bitterness had at length slipped away. "He willwrite," she had told herself, "and explain." But no word had come. Whispers had flitted to her-the tale of Sasscon's intoxication etinging barbs that clung to Beauty Vallant's name. That these should rest unanswered had filled her with resentment and anger. Slowly, but with deadly surety. had grown the bellef that he no longer cared. In the end there had been left her only pride-the pride that covers its wound and smiles. And she had in the deepest well of her heart her love for him had rested unchanged, clear and defined as a moss in amber wrapped in that mystery of silence, In the little haircloth trunk back in her room lay an old scrap-book. It held a few leaves torn from letters and many newspaper clippings. From these she had known of his work, his marriage, the great commercial success for which his name had stoodthe name that from the day of his going, she had so seldem taken upon her grip of some swift and painful emo- lips. Some of them had dealt with his habits and idiosyncrasies, hints of an altered personality, and aloofness or loneliness that had set him apart and made him, in a way, a stranger to those who should have known him best. Thus her mind had come to hold a double image: The grave man these shadowed forth, and the man she had loved, whose youthful face was in the locket she wore always on her breast. It was this face that was printed on her heart, and when John Valiant had stood before her on the porch at Rosewood, it had seemed to have risen, instinct, from that old

> He had not kept silence! He had written! It pealed through her brain like a muffled bell. But Beauty Valiant was gone with her youth; in the room near by lay that old companion who would never speak to her again. the lifelong friend-who had really failed her thirty years ago! and in a tin box a mile away lay a let-

"He won't rouse again," the doctor had said, but a little later, as he and Valiant sat beside the couch, the major opened his eyes suddenly. "Shirley," he whispered.

Shirley?"

She was sitting on the porch just outside the open window, and when she entered, tears were on her face. The doctor drew back silently; but when Valiant would have done so, the major called him neater.

"No," he panted; "I like to see you two together." His voice was very weak and tired.

As she leaned and touched his hand, he smiled whimsically. "It's mighty curious," he said, "but I can't get it out of my head that its Beauty Vallant and Judith that I'm really talking to. Foolish--isn't it?" But the idea seemed to master him, and presently he began to call Shirley by her mother's name. An odd youthfulness crept into his èyes; a subtle paradoxical boyishness. His cheek tinged with color. The deep lines about his mouth smoothed miraculously out. "Judith," he whispered, "-yousure you told me the truth a while ago, when you said-you said-"

"Yes, yes," Shirley answered, putting her young arm under him, thinking only to soothe the naxiety that seemed vaguely to thread some vague hallucination. He smiled again, "It makes it easier," he said. He looked at Valiant, his mind seeming to slip farther and farther away. "Beauty," he gasped, 'you didn't go away after all, did you! dreamed it-I reckon. It'll be-all right with you both."

He sighed peacefully, and his eyes turned to Shirley's and closed. "I'mso glad," he muttered, "so glad Ididn't really do it, Judith. It would have-been the only-low-down thing --I-ever did."

The doctor went swiftly to the door and beckoned to Jereboam. "Come in now, Jerry," he said in a low voice, "quickly." The old negro fell on his knees by the couch. "Mars' Monty!" he cried. "Is you' gwine away en leabe ol' Jerry? Is yo'? Mars'?" The cracked but loving voice struck across the void of the failing sense. For a last time the major opened his misting eyes, "Jerry, you-black scoundrel!" he whispered, and Shirley feit his head grow heavier on her arm, "I reckon it's -about time-to me going-home!"

HERBINE For the Bowels

A Cure for Chronic Constipation, Torpid Liver and Irregular Bowel Movements.

Constipation is the most common disorder of the bowels. It affects both sexes and all ages but is more prevalent among women because their duties in the household require less physical exercise than the occupations of men; therefore women suffer most from its baneful effect.

A constipated person is an easy victim when exposed to any serious disease—Pneumonia, Typhoid Fever, Malaria, Rheumatism, Small Pox, Yellow Fever and Bright's Disease gather their annual harvest of death among those who are habitually constipated. Even though they escape these diseases, such persons are always alling more or less. They have headaches, bad digestion, dizziness, virtigo (blind staggers), sallow complexion, flatulence, loss of strength; and no energy at all. Herbine has a most admirable effect in the bowels; it is cooling, purifying and regulating. It puts a prompt check on billousness, wind in the bowels, nervousness, heartburn, had breath, low spirits, drowsiness in the daytime and nervous wakefulness at night.

THE SOURCE

of a series of Articles on AGRICUL-TURAL PROBLEMS prepared by Judge S. A. Lindsey, chairman of the Texas Farm Life Commission.

Suppose one wishes to borrow on land security, $10,000. It is not easy to find one person who has that sum to lend. When he does. he finds a man of affairs who will lend the money only on such rates as prevail in that community. It is easier to find twenty persons with $500 or a hundred with $100 each. In Eastern states and in European countries working people and persons of small means put by their savings in saving banks which pay 3 and 4 per cent MARION and MADELINE on time deposits. The savings banks assemble many hundred millions of dollars. The deposits in the Postals Savings Bank of Twins" that they sometimes forget this nation already amount to $40,-000,000 although they pay only 2 per cent interest. People of small means are the greatest source of cheap money. Their money builds sky-scrapers, factories, ships railroads, telegraph, telephone systems and so on, which is assembled in this wise: The enterprise is incorporated and issues mortgage bonds. A million dollars may be put into bonds of $50 each, bearing 4 or 5 or 6 per cent interest. Concerns which make a business of selling such securities furnish the money desired and sell these bonds to investors in such securities among whom will be clerks. book-keepers, laborers, school-teachers, preachers, professional people, and all kinds of non-business persons. Thus is capital assembled which finances big enterprises. The rich do not, as some suppose, furnish cheap money; they borrow and use the money of non-business plied. people.

Every one of Uncle Sam's industries except his greatest, agriculture, has worked out methods of getting to the source of cheap money, and he has decided to work out a system for that neglected industry. He sends his agents to all parts of the world. Some of these in the countries of Continental Europe have reported that the people there have systems of rural credits which manage to tap this great source of cheap money just as other industries do, and receive copious streams of finance which give new life and vigor to agriculture, causing the fields to D'Hanis yesterday. bring forth five-fold. Desiring to see what light these systems might shed on our agricultural problems President Wilson sent a Commisson last year throughout Europe to investigate the systems there. This commission saw that land mortgage securities when issued in small denominations so that people of small means could purchase them with their savings were the favorite of all securities. People every where love the soil; they dwell upon it, from it comes their food and raiment, and they have faith in it above all things else. even above the government itself. Hence they who west on this in- with typhoid fever. vestigation found that land securities everywhere commanded cheaper money than the bonds of day on a visit to relatives. the governments, and these securities have stood the test of a hun- of Tarpley were guests of Mrs. Jim dred years.

The methods are so simple and the benefits so great and widespread that one seeing them wonders why we should not long ago have adopted some similiar method suited to agricultural conditions here. This Commission has prepared a plan which is now before Congress and which I will explain in my next article.

Their names are Marion and Madeline Fairbanks, but they have been known so long as "The Thanhouser that they have any other names. But these clever misses have now reached the dignified age of thirteen years, and so they want their real names used, Giving them their names will not enable their friends to identify them any more easily, for Marion might be Madeline and Madeline might be Marion. Each weighs seventy-four pounds, and they are the same height, four feet ten inches. They have curly hair of the same shade of brown, and their eyes are the same dark hazel.

The twins were on the regular dramatic stage before being seen in the movies. They appeared in "The Prince "Mary Jane's Pa" and in Chap," "Snow White."

NOTHING SERIOUS.

Clarence H. Mackay, apropos of an international marriage of the purely mercenary sort, said: This reminds me of a Duluth girl who wedded a marquis. "'Alphonse,' the girl asked one evening, 'why have you been so strange and cold of late?" "The marquis scowled and said:

"'Didn't you tell me last week that your father was failing?" 'Yes-physically failing,' she re-

'Oh,' said the marquis, and his look brightened. He heaved a sigh of relief. 'Oh,' said be, 'that's all right, then. I thought it was something seri-

Always in Evidence. 'What's the matter with Willie?' asked the member of congress, whose first thought is for his family. "He ate too much candy," replied the mother.

"And Tommy isn't looking well, either.

"He took off his flannels too early and caught cold."

"Well, well! I suppose I might have known it. Every time anything goes wrong you find sugar and wool are responsible."

Henry Moore was exhibiting two snakes in town Wednesday that created considerable interest. The larger reptile had the head of the smaller one in its mouth and was ensmaller one, in a last desperate effort at self-preservation, had tied itself in a complete knot around a strong weed the larger at last succeeded in swallowing the smaller.

Miss Richter Entertains.

Miss Minnie Richter entertained the Daffodil Club at a forty-two party at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Richter, Saturday evening.

Six games were played and Willie Windrow and Miss Lizzie Schuehle tied for the prize, a pretty handpainted box filled with home-made candy. In the cut Mr. Windrow won the prize. Miss Marie Filleman received the booby.

Ice cream and cake were served, and all had a most enjoyable evening.
